DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This is essentially a three-unit house, with each section having been built at a different time. Each portion will be discussed separately. The front of the house faces north and it is located on a knoll overlooking the Little Gunpowder River.

1934 section

This is the westernmost part of the house and is of one and one-half stories. The walls are constructed of common bond brick, painted yellow, with a single belt course. The bays measure one by one and the windows are 8 X 12 and 2 X 2. The foundation is a low stone one. The roof is an asphalt gable-flank, with a box cornice underneath.

1846 section

This part of the house is two stories high, made of the same common bond brick with a single belt course dividing the first and second floor. The bays measure three by two in this portion, with the eastern and western apertures limited to two small attic windows on either end. The regular windows are 12 X 12's, in nailed frames and flanked by louvered shutters as all of the windows are. The doors in this section are opposite each other on the northern and southern exposures. The southern egress has a four-light transom while the northern one is enclosed in a five-sided structure with a hip roof. Four of the sides have 24 panes each and the door itself has sidelights and a transom, as well as the original hardware. Stones from a mill lead to the main door. A shed-roof porch with a brick base covers the southern doorway. The roof is gable-flank, with asphalt shingles and an underlying box cornice. Two brick chimneys, with corbeled caps, are located on the eastern and western inside-ends of this section.

Late 1700's section

Again built of the same brick pattern, this wing is two stories tall and is adjoined east of the mainhouse. It is a two bay by one building with pegged window frames containing 6 X 6 sashes on the lower level and 3 X 3 sashes on the upper level. a single door is located on the southern exposure. There are flat brick jack arches over the lower story windows. The roof is gable-flank, with a single chimney on the western inside-end. An opening, now bricked over, is on the outside end of this flue.

The interior

The oldest section originally had a single room on both floors. The oldest section has a winding stairway behind the original fireplace near the northwest corner. This section still contains many pieces of pegged construction and beaded beams. The fireplace is quite substantial and retains the original fittings. Upstairs, the exposed brick walls are of Flemish bond and the ceiling is very low. The inside doors still have a few old strap hinges. The 1846 section does have a thru-hall, as well as some beaded beams and original plaster. Interesting curios include an 1813 naval commander's commission, signed by James Madison, as well as a letter from David Farragut.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The tract on which this home stands was called "Brooke's Cross", after the "X" which John Brooke signed the deed with during the late 1700's. The 1783 Tax List indicates that John Brooke's parcel consisted of 100 acres. The oldest part of the house dates from the late 1700's and was built either by John Brooke or by William Baldwin. Baldwin had served in Charles Baker's 15th Harford Militia Company in 1776. This family owned the place for over one hundred years, and were probably the ones after the which the nearby road was named. The main portion of the house was constructed in 1846, and the 1878 Martenet map shows the owner to be Silas Baldwin.

Outbuildings

Behind the house is a fieldstone meathouse or springhouse, quoined at the corners. It has a wood shingle roof and a doorway facing northwards. Just below this is a root cellar entrance. The grounds around the house still have some of the original boxwoods. Southeast of the main house is the barn, built of the same stone as the meathouse. It has a gable-flank roof and faces eastwards. To the rear of it is an attached perpendicular tool shed, also of stone.
